This gives bungalows for sale in Manchester direct rail connections across the North West and to London in around two hours. The development bridges the fast-growing Greengate and N.O.M.A. neighbourhoods, while the cobbled lanes of the Medieval Quarter and Chetham's are just a short stroll away.

Lifestyle

H2: Life around Dutton Street

Dutton Street puts residents at the heart of Manchester's northern city-centre renewal, an area increasingly known for independent coffee shops, craft breweries and street food traders rather than chain retail.

N.O.M.A.'s food halls and Greengate's riverside bars are both a short walk away, while the Northern Quarter's vintage shops and live music venues sit just beyond. Weekday mornings bring a steady flow of professionals heading to Deansgate and Spinningfields' office district, both under twenty minutes on foot or by tram.

At weekends, Manchester Arena and the Printworks entertainment complex are close enough to reach without a car, and Manchester Cathedral gardens offer a quieter green pocket nearby.

For families, the wider Greater Manchester area includes well-regarded state and independent schools, with school-run logistics made easier by the development's proximity to the inner ring road and Metrolink network.

Market details

H2: Manchester’s Property Market

Manchester's property market spans everything from Victorian terraces to brand-new towers. Before browsing 1 bedroom houses for sale in Manchester, or any other type of house, we suggest weighing up the lifestyle trade-offs of new-build apartment living.

Waterhouse Gardens offers an alternative worth considering: concierge service, a private clubhouse and round-the-clock security, without the maintenance demands of an older house.

Downsizers who might otherwise look for a bungalow for sale in Manchester often find that a ground-floor or lift-served apartment here delivers similar single-level convenience, minus the garden upkeep.
